Raising Standards. Protecting Homeowners

Preparing for quality homes

London's housing market is experiencing unprecedented uncertainty, presenting a myriad of challenges for developers, designers, construction managers and other professionals working across the private, public and affordable housing sectors.

With a host of expert speakers, this year's theme of 'Preparing for Quality Homes' will cover the changing regulatory, political, economic and market landscape and what that means and the potential impact for your business in the future.

A strong feature of the future will be the increasing use of components, framed constructions and off site manufacturing which we will also explore as part of this year's programme. Building upon feedback from last year's Building for tomorrow events and the ongoing collaborative work we do with manufacturers, we will look at how feedback on quality can help improve standards for the future as well as meet changing regulatory requirements.

Agenda (London)

The future of good design following the Hackitt Review

A keynote address by Andy von Bradsky, MHCLG.

The regulatory landscape – fire

Following the Independent Review of Building Regulations and Fire Safety by Dame Judith Hackitt, change is on its way – how is this taking shape?

Passive fire protection for steelwork

James Green Drylining Consultancy give a consultants perspective on linking good design with passive fire protection.

MMC and offsite manufacturing

The skills shortage has led to an increasing momentum for the use of alternative systems of build which require preparation and understanding. Bft 2019 will explore how the industry is responding.

The London property market

Always a popular session, we are pleased to welcome back Hometrack, who will give a valuable update on the the current challenges facing the London property market and the impact of Brexit.

Preparing for steel

Light Steel Frame is increasingly being used both onsite and in offsite factory systems so we take a look at the critical design considerations and onsite detailing that is required to ensure best practice is achieved.

Quality and the future

Preparing for quality and achieving customer satisfaction

This session will concentrate on the ever important topic of customer satisfaction along with a discussion regarding the new Ombudsman for the new build market.

We are also pleased to have Akzo Nobel join us to talk about the quality of finishing in new homes.

Balconies

Sapphire will be discussing the future design and use of balconies in high rise schemes.

Skies without limits

In this session we uncover the use of drone technology on large scale development projects with the help of PwC and Plowman Craven.
